Eva & Franco Mattes, “Data Doubles,” at Team (bungalow). The New York-based duo, whose work frequently examines the vagaries of internet culture, have a playful installation on view at Team (bungalow) that examines the more physical manifestations of data — namely, the bunches of cable that are generally hidden from view by architecture, but which the artists, in this case, have transformed into a work of installation that snakes in and out of the gallery space. Naturally, this wouldn’t be an installation about the internet if it didn’t contain at least one visual representation of a cat. Through June 23. 306 Windward Ave., teamgal.com.
